Our Relief Journey So Far

In the aftermath of the devastating floods, our relief team has been working continuously to reach families in some of the most affected, remote, underserved, and unreported areas of Sivasagar and surrounding regions.

This relief effort is not limited to easily accessible locations. We are travelling from remote village to remote village, reaching families who are often among the last to receive assistance.

One of the most meaningful parts of this mission has been delivering relief directly into the hands of affected families. In areas where roads are inaccessible due to floodwaters, relief materials are being transported by boats, allowing us to reach people who would otherwise remain isolated.

From the road to the river, from village to village, and from hand to hand — we are taking relief where it is needed most.

By Road

From remote village to remote village, reaching families who are often among the last to receive assistance.

By River

Where floodwaters have made road travel impossible, relief materials are transported in by boat.

By Hand

Every kit is delivered individually, placed directly into the hands of each affected family.

More Than a Relief Kit

For a family facing the loss of food, shelter, belongings, and security, every item matters.

- A bag of rice means a meal.
- Clean drinking water means safety.
- Soap and sanitation supplies help protect health.
- Clothing restores dignity.

And the act of personally reaching a family reminds them that they have not been forgotten.

This relief mission is about more than distributing materials. It is about standing beside people when they need us the most.

Our team is making every effort to reach remote and difficult-to-access locations, including areas where floodwaters have made road travel impossible. In such places, relief is being carried by boats and delivered individually, directly into the hands of affected families.

Because relief should reach everyone — not only those who are easy to reach.
